

A detailed stone relief of a falcon head, likely representing the god Horus, carved into a weathered stone wall. The falcon has a large, circular eye, a curved beak, and is wearing a long, pleated collar. The background of the image is a black triangle that separates the relief from the text.

But these are no ordinary copies – they have been painstakingly handcrafted by artisans in precious metals and gems and are worth an £3.5million.

Every detail of the originals has been recreated in gold, precious jewels and stone to mirror the wonders first viewed by archaeologist Howard Carter when he discovered the tomb of the boy king in 1922.

Tutankhamun and the Treasures of the Pharaohs has already astounded 1.5million visitors to the exhibition on its tour of Europe.
